SCHOOL REPORT.

DIVISION OF WORK.

Heretofore the schools have been divided into three groups, and each member of the board has confined his attention to his particular group. Practically this gave three distinct districts, and the result was not satisfactory. This year the work was divided rather than the town. The board voted that the chairman should visit schools and superintend all matters pertaining to teachers and pupils; that the secretary should be purchasing agent and custodian of text-books and supplies; and that the treasurer should attend to repairs, furnishings and fuel. The work is reported in accordance with this division.

It needs to be added, however, that the hiring and dismissing of teachers, and the decisions where to maintain schools, what text books to purchase and what repairs to make, was not delegated, but is the duty of the board.

CHAIRMAN'S REPORT.—BY JAMES C. EMERSON.

GENERAL REMARKS.

There have been twenty-eight weeks of schooling, divided into summer and fall terms of eight weeks each, and a winter term of twelve weeks. This is one week more than there was the preceding year, and eight weeks more than the average of the last ten years.

Nine schools have been maintained, and all have had an equal number of weeks, except Dennett and Pitman. At Dennett the parents presumed to dictate as to the length of the term and the manner of enforcing school law. Failing in this they withdrew their children from school, but finally repented and received twenty-five weeks. At Pitman the number of pupils became too small for a school, and it was closed at the end of the first month of the winter term. Some of the pupils were transferred to Locke's Corner, and private instruction was provided for the others.

In five of the schools the teachers have taught during the year. Only four of the twenty-seven terms have been taught by inexperienced teachers.

The teacher for the Centre school failed to appear at the opening of the summer term, and Mr. George began the school. Another teacher was secured, but he resigned the same week. Mr. George completed the term.

The number of pupils who have attended two or more weeks is 190: boys, 92; girls, 98. This is a little less than for the preceding year, but the average attendance is very nearly as large, and the number of those who have been perfect in attendance is a half larger.

NEED OF A COURSE.

The free text-book system took away one evil and brought another; it reduced the number of classes by making the text-books uniform, and multiplied them by making the books free. Each pupil wanted them all; they were free, and he took what he could lug. A year ago some of our pupils were pursuing six studies, besides reading, spelling and penmanship. There were some schools with forty classes and more. Neither pupil nor teacher could do that amount of work properly, and when the end of the book was reached, the class began anew, or part way back, and so wandered round from term to term.

The board has limited pupils to three studies each, and an attempt has been made to classify. This has been found especially difficult in arithmetic. The class that is started right tends to break in pieces before the end of the term. The smart boy must go fast; the dull boy slow; and the absent one stands still.

There seems but one remedy: Prescribe the amount of work; see that it is done. The pupil who is able to do more can take an extra study; the one who cannot do as much can drop one; and the boy who is absent every third day should be set back from term to term till his parents learn that he cannot do work at home and at school at the same time.

The board has but entered upon this plan. It did not know how much work a class should do, and none of the teachers could give a satisfactory answer; but a record of the work of each class has been kept throughout the year, and in a little while this matter can be determined. The month is made the unit for reckoning; the terms are of even months; an examination is holden at the end of each month, and the pupils progress and attendance is reported to the parent. At the close of a term, or whenever a book is completed, those pupils who have done satisfactory work are given certificates, others are required to pursue the work again.

VACCINATION.

The board decided to enforce the statute requiring pupils to be vaccinated. The statute was enforced as decided.
